

About Vamizi Island

The History of Vamizi

The original visionaries of this conservation project first visited the Quirimbas Archipelago in Northern Mozambique in 1998. They believed this undeveloped - and then unprotected - area to be of huge natural significance as a terrestrial and marine wildlife sanctuary not only for Mozambique but for the whole of East Africa. In 2001 they went on to secure the Maluane Concession, a group of three islands of which Vamizi is the largest. Thus the Maluane Project was conceived, and has since been supporting and funding the development of this concession.

The primary aim of the project was to combine tourism with wildlife conservation and community development to protect this unspoilt area in the Indian Ocean.

The Making of Vamizi

The development of Vamizi Island for up-market eco tourism was an extraordinary undertaking. There was no fresh water available on the island. There was no reasonable access beyond small local wooden boats and there were no roads beyond roughly cut tracks through the bush.

However, despite adverse conditions and logistical challenges, Vamizi Island Lodge was opened in 2005 and soon after visited by such luminaries as Nelson Mandela and Graca Machel. Now ten years on Vamizi has a beautiful, barefoot luxury lodge, with 13 private villas, a desalination plant providing thousands of litres of fresh water a day, an airstrip suitable for single engined aircraft and the formation of a road, circumnavigating the island.

It has taken extraordinary commitment and persistence but as one of the donors to this project says, "Vamizi Island is where we still have a chance to make a difference. You know, once you've seen Vamizi you become obsessed with saving it."

The Conservation of Vamizi

Vamizi Island and the seas around it harbour some of the most significant and endangered habitats and wildlife in the western Indian Ocean, with over 180 species of unbleached coral, and over 400 species of reef fish.

When the Maluane Project came to the area over a decade ago, there was great concern that this area would one day come under pressure from indiscriminate fishing and general population pressures.

Vamizi Island and the Maluane Project have a permanent conservation team that support various direct conservation activities to actively resist this threat.

Besides a number of community initiatives, and day to day ocean surveillance, the team is also at work on the ocean and forest floor.

Current activities include: Turtle monitoring, reporting illegal activities of industrial long-line fishing, in-depth marine surveys, clearing reefs and bush of invasive species, a low level whale research programme, a dolphin research programme, a PhD study on the impact of the diving tourism in the local communities.

Through continued donations and a conservation fee charged to every guest, the Maluane Project continues to support marine research, community outreach and direct conservation initiatives.

The Maluane Project is all about the preservation of Vamizi's remote wilderness. It is hoped that by the use of responsible tourism to provide funding and to conserve and raise awareness of this extraordinary undertaking, Vamizi Island and its environs will remain as unspoilt and beautiful for many generations to come.

Causing a commotion in the Indian Ocean

Move over the Maldives and Mauritius... there is a new player in Indian Ocean luxury and it's coming in the form of a rather unique Mozambique.

Something of a hidden gem, this sparkling coastline has only been visited so far by 'those in the know'. Powder white sands and azure blue seas abound, but this time it's less manicured, more remote feeling, and even a little adventurous.

What this new Indian Ocean alternative is offering is summed up by incredible Vamizi Island. Billowing white muslins drape enormous beds, the gentle sea breeze whispers through pretty latticed windows and vast decks surround Robinson Crusoe villas scattered with deep sofas, colonial style chairs and cushion covered day beds...

The beaches are your own, the diving is to die for, deep sea fishing is unrivalled and the privacy is quite spectacular.

No rows of over water bungalows or 'carefully hidden' neighbours at Vamizi Island... the villas are 70 metres apart, absolutely private and with the company of weaver birds working over head and monkeys gamboling in front of your villa you will never feel lonely.

Vamizi Island, like most luxury African lodges is also fully inclusive except for scuba diving and deep sea fishing, so unlike other Indian Ocean destinations you will not face an extras bill at the end of your holiday.

So if you are looking for Indian Ocean luxury, beaches and seas, a two hour time change, no extras bill and something a little different look no further than magical Mozambique..

Original Travel are offering 6 nights at Vamizi, 1 night at Oyster Bay from £3475 per person for fully inclusive accommodation and international and domestic flights and transfers. Dive in...

...to the Indian Ocean's most precious hidden secret...

In the Northern reaches of Mozambique's mesmerizing coastline, lies the very special Vamizi Island where 13 Robinson Crusoe villas nestle over 70 metres apart in the lush undergrowth. However, to simply experience the icing sugar beaches and luxurious, airy villas during your stay would be to just scratch the surface of this spectacular destination.

It is when you take a deep breath and dive in that the adventure really begins...some of the world's most spectacular unbleached coral provides the backdrop to a dazzling kaleidoscope of colour as fish in their thousands swirl around you and whales breach over head.

There is diving for every level here but to mention Vamizi Island without Neptune's Arm would be to withhold one of the greatest secrets of the diving world. Named as 'one of the top ten dive sites on the planet', this is an underwater island whose surface starts about 8 metres below the water and offers canyons teeming with reef sharks, hundreds of snappers, potato bass and a myriad of tropical reef fish appearing in such dense masses that they take on the appearance of glorious darting clouds swirling over head.

Vamizi Island offers the 2 day PADI Scuba diver course, the 3.5 day PADI Open Water qualification or for those who are already proficient divers there are the full range of specialist courses on offer.
